

Milestone Guide

Why celebration keeps habits, the milestone ladder, a celebration menu, four rules, and your plan ·

Module 7, Training 4

Why

Dopamine marks what's worth repeating (Schultz, Science); the celebration is the step people skip and the one that matters most (Fogg, Tiny Habits); rituals reduce distress and increase control (Norton & Gino, Journal of Experimental Psychology: General; Hobson et al., Personality and Social Psychology Review); progress on meaningful work is the strongest lift to motivation (Amabile, the progress principle). On a journey with two-week waits, milestones built on what you did give the wait landmarks that are yours regardless of the result.

The ladder and the menu

SIZE	WHEN	CELEBRATION MENU
Micro	every ticked box	fist pump · "yes" · hand on heart (2 seconds; silly until day four)
Weekly	the check-in	name the win out loud, both of you · a glass bead in a jar per kept habit · a sticker on the plan · log photo posted in the forum
Monthly	each milestone from T1	a date night that isn't about food · a walk somewhere beautiful with a thermos · a protected bath and early night · the good olive oil / glass containers / purifier · a letter to each other · a fertility feast, table set properly
Major	end of month 3, start of month 4	a day away · reread the future letter and add a paragraph · plant something (a tree, a herb garden) · frame the Module 1 quiz beside the Module 7 quiz · a monthly photo in the same spot, twelve in a row

Four rules

1. Not sugar (celebrating with the thing you've been quieting reopens the loop).
2. Not screens (scrolling is an absence, not a reward).
3. Named out loud: "We did month one."
4. Shared: partner, circle, or forum. A witnessed milestone counts more.

Solo: every item works alone or with a friend; the forum is your witness.
